Senate Suggests 'Reasonable Fee'

HARRISBURG, April 27 (B-The Senate has urged all local medical societies in Pennsylvania to set up "reasonable and equitable" fee for Salk anti-polio inoculations.

A bipartisan resolution, adopted unanimously and sent to the House, asks that the vaccine inoculations be "kept uniform and reasonable as possible in price so as not to be beyond the reach of anybody."

Sen. Charles R. Weiner (D-Phila) said "we need safeguards to insure equitable distribution to all persons requesting it." Several counties in Pennsylvania

In this one paragraph of his address before the nation's editors and publishers President Eisenhower capsuled the reasons for an extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, now before the Senate and now in jeopardy.

The headline in the President's speech was hung upon his revelation that our nation will build and send around the world an atomic-powered merchant ship, the first

It wasn't accident that the President chose his major address on two-way trade to make this revelation. An atomic ship and an atomic trade policy are linked inseparably in the world we all would like to

And just as this ship will be a symbol, for all the world to see, of our nation's dedica- tionism."

Challenge Of Trade "The issue is clean-cut. Either we foster tion to harness the power of the atom for peaceful uses and the improvement of human living, so is reciprocal trade our key, weapon to bring about the world conditions in which this peace can come about. It is a practical symbol of our willingness to join in international co-operation.

"Two-way trade," the President said, "is a broad avenue by which all men and nations of good will can travel toward a golden era of peace and plenty." It is an avenue down which we have been traveling for the past 21 years of "gradual reduction of unjustifiable trade barriers." It is allowing other nations to sell their raw materials and goods to us, without imposing restrictions and tariffs that make it impossible. It is reciprocity upon the part of these same other nations in erecting no barriers against American products.

Peace depends upon a Free World, strong enough militarily and economically, to withstand the challenge of communism. And Free World strength depends upon a widely shared prosperity here in America. We can be neither prosperous at home nor build up economic strength abroad if we kill or water down reciprocal trade and retreat into "economic nationalism and isola-

How To Fight Communism

The address by President Meany of the American Federation of Labor to the American Society of Newspaper Editors was one of the most refreshing and encouraging approaches to the Communist peril heard in a long time.

Mr. Meany long has been aware of the Red peril and often has warned about it.

But it was refreshing to hear the top man in America's biggest labor organization again face the facts of communism realistically. Organized labor's brethren abroad could study Mr. Meany's words with profit.

Mr. Meany's address, in effect, is a call to freedom-loving workers of the world to awaken to the Communist peril. The battle to remain free, he says, will not be won either on the battlefield alone or by professional diplomats alone.

"Today, because of the very nature, aims, strategy and tactics of the Communist enemy," he said, "the fate of world peace and freedom will, first of all, be determined in the factories and on the farms-by the men and women of production, by their attitudes, by their actions, by their devotion to democracy ...

Component Deficiency Plan Is Completely Bureaucratic I see where officials at the Office of Defense Mobilizaton and a number of other government agencies are busy working on what they call the "Component Deficiency Program." That's bureaucratic gobbledygook for seeing to it that there are plenty of spare parts for the war machinery in the event that trouble breaks loose. They are trying to make sure that if war should come we wouldn't have a lot of boats without propellors, motors without armatures, wheels without axles, radios without tubes, and guns without triggers. I'm glad to hear it. While the sun still shines intermittently is the time to lay up nuts and bolts for a rainy day. This government concern about stockpiling for possible rough times reminds me of a stockpiling project of my own that I've been neglecting shamefully. Back in the "Thirties I firmly resolved that I was going to stockpile depression lore as a hedge against privation when the next spell of hard times came along.

So far I haven't done it but I still think I will. I have given considerable thought to the possibilities for a depression-proof occupation. The only one that comes anywhere near my alley is whatever you'd call an occupation that means being an authority on depressions.

A stockpile of spare nuts and bolts would be no consolation if the bottom fell out again and I found myself broke and out of a job. But I can see how a qualified slump expert might be able to do pretty well in a period of economic collapse and wholesale unemployment. Peddling advice and writing free-lance articles for the slick-paper magazines, you know.

I remember that last big depression only too well, and it runs in my mind that about the only commodity for which there was anything like a seller's market was answers to such questions as:

"How long do these things usually last?" What's the best way of easing the pain?" "Is it likely to get worse before it gets better?" People were eager to read anything in that vein they could lay hands on, and the quality of the available supply was only middling. The best-known suppliers-fellows like Babson-always looked prosperous and seemed to be eating fairly high on the hog.

So I had this idea that if I ever got out of that mess I would brace myself for the next one by studying diligently and making myself a walking encyclopedia on the history, causes, symptoms and cures of economic depressions. The hgck of it is that depressions are almost as depre

The second request particularly intrigued the Subcommittee, as he had lengthily explained how he had just completed a reorganization of the State Department's security system. Senator Harley Kilgore (D., W. Va.) appeared baffled by the need for so

"Why $75,000 of taxpayers' money for that?" Kilgore demanded

"Mr. Chairman, that money is necessary because a security operation is only as good as its filing system," replied McLeod. "Our filing system isn't good enough; in my opinion it needs a lot of improving. I want to have the latest information available on every employee of the State Department, and to do that I've got to have more files."

Also, under questioning, he explained the request for additional agents as follows:

There is one phase of our security which, in my judgment, has not had sufficient attention. This is increasing the efficiency of 'the physical protection of State Department documents and records, so that we will know where they are at all times and them and for what purpose. > Note: The State Department is skeptical of solving any problems by negotiating with Russia. This view is voiced in an unpublished memorandum to members of the Senate Appropriations Committee. It was given them by W. Park Armstrong, special assistant for Intelligence to the Secretary of State, and publishable highlights are as follows: "There is little immediate likelihood of a significant reduction of international tension or for settlement of major political problems indication that the Communist bloc will continue unabated in its efforts at promoting discord -among the countries of the free world, while still considering the possibility of all-out war to gain its desired objectives."

More Atoms-The Army will spend more money for atomic weapons and research, in the fiscal year starting July 1, than ever before.

The publishable total for certain expenditures is $646,000,000. That is approximately 13 per cent of the Army's $4,930,000,000 budget for research and procurement. This percentage does not include all nuclear activities, many of which cannot be disclos-

This highly significant information is contained in a report to the House Appropriations Subcommittee headed by Representative Robert Sikes (D., Fla.). Committeemen wanted to know what the Army is doing in preparing for nuclear warfare, and the summary answered a number of their questions.

Regarding the Army's over-all plans the report states:

"In the broad sense the entire budget is devoted to sustaining an Army establishment capable of meeting both atomic and conventional warfare requirements; have a record of who has had to attempt to identify atomic operations, as a thing apart, would want my office to be able to put fall to consider the over-all conits hand on any document and cept of the nature of land milltary operations in the atomic age.

Financing

We're speaking, of course, of the United States Savings Bonds Program—one of the greatest sales promotion endeavors of all

Uncle Sam first let his nephews and nieces in on the financing of their government back in the 30's with issuance of the so-called "baby bonds." It was the little man's invitation to put his money where the big fellows put theirs. the safest place in the world, in United States bonds.

Today's popular Series E and H Savings Bonds are an outgrowth of that first nod by the Treasury in the direction of the small investor. They're still the safest, surest commodity in all the land -safe because their security is the wealth of the world's richest nation. Every acre of land, every great factory, each towering skyscraper, the earning power of 164 million people stand behind every U. S. Savings Bond, whether its face value be $100 or $10,000.

Out of the years of family experience with bond savings has come a unique and little heralded national defense against the twin evils of inflation and deflation, a stabilizing at its source of a vast portion of the country's earned income. When money is flowing freely, bond purchases help to remove excess spending power and thus resist inflation. When money is "tight" then bond reserves come to the rescue to boost a sagging economy and resist deflation. It's as simple as that.

When we realize that over 40 million people own Savings Bonds, it becomes apparent that they exert an increasing force on the national economy. The very word "economy" is derived from a Greek word meaning "housekeeping." Savings Bonds have become a versatile tool of smart housekeeping. Even the smallest earn ers have learned their flexibility -their usefulness not only as long-term family savings, but also as a depository for funds earmarked for earlier use.

House Votes San Juan Rabbit Ban

HARRISBURG, April 27 (P) The importation of San Juan rabbits from the state of Washington would be banned until after Sept. 1, 1957 under a proposal that won House approval yester-

The ban was suggested by the House Conservation and Wild Life Committee as the result of its investigation into the controversy between farmers and sportsmen over the animal.

The bill, sent to the Senate by a 201-5 vote, specifies the Agriilture Department, in cooperation with the State Game Commission, would have the power to decide whether to lift or continue the ban after Aug. S1, 1957.

Their decision would be based on whether the animal is destructive to farms or farm products and would have to be made pub-He by the agriculture secretary,

Voting against the measure were Reps. W. W. Waterhouse (R-Erie), Daniel H. Erb (R-Blair), John J. Vaughan (R-Allegheny), Harry W. Price (R-Mifflin) and Richard O. Hass (D-York). There was no discussion before the vote.

At any one time, there usually ate about 25 airplanes flying across the Atlantic Ocean.
